syphilis (sif'-il-is) [origin obscure; probably from σύν, with; φιλεῖν, to love]. An infectious, contagious, venereal disease, characterized by a variety of structural lesions of which the chancre, the mucous patch, and the gumma are the most distinctive. A spirochete (Spirochaeta pallida, or Treponema pallidum) is the cause. The disease is generally acquired in sexual congress, hence its earliest manifestations appear upon the genital organs, but any abraded surface of the body, if brought in contact with the syphilitic poison, may give entrance to the infection. The earliest lesion of acquired syphilis is the chancre, initial sclerosis, or primary sore, which appears after a period of incubation varying from two to three weeks. It is usually a reddish-brown papule with an ulcerated central spot, and has a slight serous or purulent discharge Taken between the fingers

it is found to have a peculiar cartilaginous hardness Microscopically it consists of an accumulation of round cells, epithelioid cells, with perhaps a giant cell here and there The blood-vessels present a hyperplasia of the intima, to which in part the induration of the chancre is due

FACIES OF SYPHILIS

Very soon after the appearance of the chancre the nearest lymphatic glands become enlarged and indurated—the indolent buboes of syphilis The mucous patch, condyloma latum moist papule, or mucous tubercle is located upon mucous membranes, at mucocutaneous junctions, or where two skin surfaces are in habitual contact, and is a flat, scarcely elevated patch, generally covered by a whitish pellicle The gumma or gummy tumor is a rounded nodule varying in size from the dimensions of a pea to those of a small apple Its favorite seats are the periosteum of flat bones, the membranes of the brain, the liver, spleen and testicle It is usually soft, and contains in its interior a gelatinous "gummy" material Another important though not distinctive lesion produced by syphilis is a diffuse sclerosis of the blood-vessels, especially of the parenchymatous organs The clinical course of syphilis is generally divided into three stages the primary (primary syphilis), characterized by the presence of the chancre and of the indolent bubo, the secondary (secondary syphilis), by the mucous patch, cutaneous eruptions, sore throat, and general enlargement of the lymphatic glands, the tertiary (tertiary syphilis), by the gumma and by severe skin-lesions Between the appearance of the chancre and the secondary manifestations a period of six weeks usually elapses The tertiary phenomena follow the secondary after a stage of quiescence of variable length Syphilis also bears an important, but as yet obscure, relation to certain diseases of the nervous system, such as locomotor ataxia and parietic dementia s., congenital See s., hereditary s. d'emblée, the invasion of syphilis without a local lesion s., extragenital, that in which the first lesion is situated elsewhere than on the genital organs s., hereditary, syphilis transmitted from parent to offspring See Colles law, Demarquay's, Hutchinson's, Krisowski's, Silex's, Wegner's sign s. ingenta. Synonym of s. insoatium s. oconomica, a form of syphilis insoatium in which the disease is acquired through teaming and drinking or household utensils, or by incidental contact with syphilitic persons s., pulmonary, a rare disease which is either hereditary or follows the initial attack after from 10 to 20 years or longer. Two forms may be differentiated—a chronic interstitial indurative process and a growth of gummata s. technica, syphilis acquired in following one's occupation, as by physicians, midwives, nurses s., venereal, syphilis acquired in illegitimate sexual intercourse s., visceral, syphilis of the viscera—the lesions are either inflammatory or gummatous tuberculosis (tū-ber-kū-lo'-sis) [tubercle]. An infectious disease due to Bacillus tuberculosis, discovered by Koch. The lesion produced by the growth of the bacillus is the tubercle (miliary or gray tubercle or nodule), a small, grayish, translucent nodule, from $\frac{1}{16}$ to 2 mm. in diameter, firmly embedded in the surrounding tissues. By the coalescence of neighboring tubercles large masses, the so-called tuberculous infiltrations, are produced. The tendency of tuberculous lesions is to undergo cheesy necrosis. For this degeneration two factors are responsible: the absence of blood-vessels and the action of peculiar poisons elaborated by the bacillus. The breaking down of tuberculous areas in the interior of organs gives rise to cavities, which may be seen in muscles, bones, brain, lymphatic glands, and elsewhere, but are most pronounced in the lungs. On surfaces—skin and mucous membranes—tuberculosis often leads to the formation of ulcers. The most frequent seats of tuberculosis are the lung, the intestinal tract, the lymphatic glands, the serous membranes, the bones, the skin, the testicle, the epididymis, the brain, the Fallopian tubes, the uterus, the spleen. The symptoms of tuberculosis vary with the localization of the disease. t., afebrile, typhoid fever with the usual symptoms, positive diazo and Widal reaction, presence of rose-spots, but absence of increased temperature. t., ambulatory, typhoid fever in which the patient does not, or will not, take to his bed. t. carrier. See carriers. t. condition, see typhoid state. t. fever, enteric fever, abdominal typhus, ileotyphus. An infectious disease caused by Bacillus typhosus discovered by Eberth. It is introduced into the body with the food and drinking-water, and is found in the intestine, the spleen, and the fecal discharges, but may also occur in the various complicating lesions. The principal lesions of typhoid fever are an enlargement and necrosis of Peyer's patches, and enlargement of the spleen and the mesenteric glands. The mucous membrane of the intestine is also the seat of a catarrhal inflammation. After a period of incubation of from two to three weeks the disease sets in with weakness, headache, vague pains, a tendency to diarrhea, and nose-bleed. The temperature gradually rises, being higher each evening than the previous evening, and reaches its maximum (104° - 105° F.) in from one to two weeks. It then remains at this level for from one to two weeks, and finally sinks by lysis. The pulse is soft and dicrotic, but often not so rapid as would be expected from the high temperature. The tongue is at first coated on the dorsum and red at the tip and edges, but soon becomes dry, brown, and tremulous, and, like the teeth and lips, covered with sordes. There is usually complete anorexia, the bowels are loose, and the stools have a peculiar "peasoup" color. At times constipation exists. Slight congestion of the lungs with cough is usually present. On the seventh, eighth, or ninth day the peculiar eruption appears—it consists of small, slightly elevated, rose-colored spots, disappearing on pressure, and coming out in successive crops. Nervous symptoms are prominent in typhoid fever, and are headache, slight deafness, stupor, muttering delirium, carphology, subsultus tendinum, and coma vigil. Complications are frequent, the most important being intestinal hemorrhage, perforation of the bowel, peritonitis, pneumonia, and nephritis. Relapses are fairly common, although second attacks are rare. t. state, the condition of stupor and hebétude, with dry, brown tongue, sordes on the teeth, rapid, feeble pulse, incontinence of feces and urine, and rapid wasting, seen in typhoid fever and other continued fevers. t. sudoral, typhoid fever accompanied by profuse sweating and great prostration. t. vaccination, vaccination against typhoid; see vaccination (2). t., walking, see t., ambulatory.

The only peculiar lesions noted postmortem are a dark fluid state of the blood and a staining of the endocardium and intima of the blood-vessels. The disease is caused by the Bacillus typhi exanthematici (Plotz). After a period of incubation of from a few hours to two weeks, the disease sets in abruptly with pains in the head, back, and limbs, the fever rising rapidly to 104° or 105° F. The nervous symptoms resemble those of typhoid fever. The eruption appears on the fourth or fifth day as rose-colored spots scattered over all the body, and quickly becoming hemorrhagic. PHYSICIAN'S DOSE TABLE

BY

WILBUR L. SCOVILLE, Ph. M.

AUTHOR OF THE "ART OF COMPOUNDING," MEMBER OF THE COMMITTEE OF REVISION OF THE U. S. PHARMACOPŒIA, AND CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE OF REVISION OF THE NATIONAL FORMULARY; FORMERLY PROFESSOR OF THEORY AND PRACTICE OF PHARMACY, MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGE OF PHARMACY, BOSTON

"The use in this volume of certain portions of the text of the United States Pharmacopœia is by virtue of permission received from the Board of Trustees of the United States Pharmacopœial Convention. The said Board of Trustees is not responsible for any inaccuracy nor for any errors in the statement of quantities or percentage strengths."

"Permission to use for comment parts of the text of the National Formulary, Fifth Edition, in this volume, has been granted by the Committee on Publication by authority of the Council of the American Pharmaceutical Association."

The Doses given are for adults; for children, either Young's or Cowling's rule is sufficiently accurate for most drugs, except narcotics and cathartics. According to Young's rule the dose is obtained by dividing the age by 12 plus the age. Thus, for a child of 3 years, $\frac{3}{3+12} = 3/15$ or $1/5$.

Cowling's rule is to divide the number of the next birthday by 24. Thus, for a child 5 years old, $6/24 = 1/4$. Of narcotics, like opium, not more than one-half of this proportion should be prescribed, while of cathartics this dose may be exceeded two or three times.

For subcutaneous administration the dose should be about one-half of that given by the mouth; and for rectal administration about twice the amount given by the mouth. Equivalents: one teaspoonful, $\mathfrak{z}\text{i}$ or 4 cc.; one dessertspoonful, $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$ or 8 cc.; one tablespoonful, $\mathfrak{z}\text{iv}$ or 15 cc.

ABBREVIATIONS

A = Alcohol. C = Chloroform. E = Ether. G = Glycerin. O = Oils. m = moderately. mens. = menstruum. Sl. = slightly. vy. = very. W = Water.

REVISED BY V. G. KIMBALL, D.V.M.

ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF VETERINARY MEDICINE, UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA

Authority to use for comment the Pharmacopœia of the United States of America, Tenth Decennial Revision, in this volume, has been granted by the Board of Trustees of the United States Pharmacopœial Convention, which Board of Trustees is in no way responsible for the accuracy of any translations of the official weights and measures or for any statements as to strength of official preparations.

Taking the horse as the standard, the cow would take one and a half times; the sheep, one-fifth; the swine, one-eighth; the dog, one-sixteenth; the cat, one-thirty-second, or one-half the dose for the dog.

The dose for the dog is about the same as the human dose, but the size of the dog is taken into consideration. Taking the dog or man as the standard, the increase in the dose for the pig would be twice the amount; sheep, three times; horse, sixteen times; cow, twenty-four times.

For hypodermic use, the dose should be half that used by the mouth. Intravenous doses, one-half or two-thirds of the hypodermic dose. For use by the rectum, should be twice that by the mouth.

Equivalents. One teaspoonful of liquid equals about $\text{F } \overline{\text{3}} \text{ i}$ (4 Cc.); of powder $\text{℥} \text{ iiss}$ (3.2 Gm.); one dessertspoonful $\text{F } \overline{\text{3}} \text{ ii}$ (8 Cc.); one tablespoonful of liquid about $\overline{\text{3}} \text{ ss}$ (15 Cc.); of powder about $\overline{\text{3}} \text{ ii}$ (8 Gm.); one wineglassful about $\text{F } \overline{\text{3}} \text{ iss to ii}$ (45 to 50 Cc.); one teacupful about $\text{F } \overline{\text{3}} \text{ iv}$ (120 Cc.); one tumblerful about $\text{F } \overline{\text{3}} \text{ iv to viii}$ (120 to 240 Cc.).
